Some London Views

A rather mixed collection of photographs from central London, some classic architectural shots along with other more mundane, run of the mill almost tourist type shots. I make no apology for that because these are images that have given me some joy over the past five or so years and show many of the things I have seen and have liked in London.

Several shots come from a trip down the River Thames by clipper (thanks Bill!) and others from simply walking around.

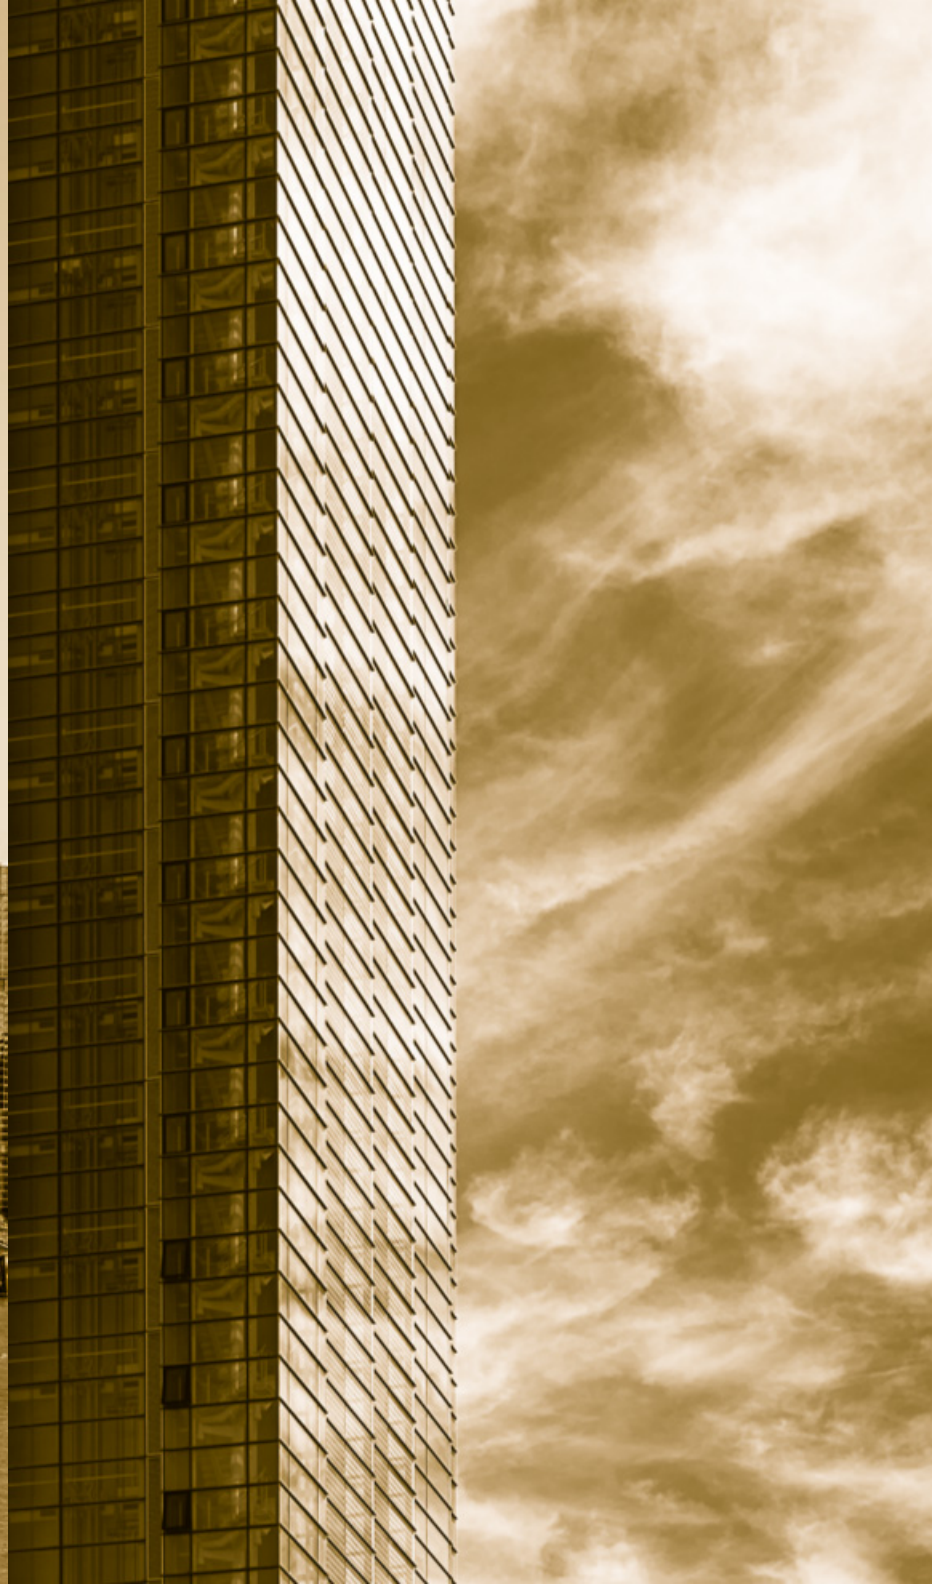

No sites are given, some are obvious but others are not. You will only find them by wandering around central London.

Hopefully there are some photos you enjoy.
